Tools and adaptive gadgets to make life easier and relieve your scleroderma symptoms

As a person with scleroderma you know firsthand that there are days when doing even the simplest of tasks can be a struggle. Opening jars, putting on socks, buttoning a shirt or even eating your food can become an obstacle. Life with scleroderma does not need to be difficult! You can face each day with fewer hindrances by using products that will enable tasks to be less challenging.

Below is a list of products, tools, and some tips that can be used to alleviate discomfort in scleroderma and other auto-immune patients. Look over these products and determine which ones fit your current needs and continue to check back as your needs may change. The most important thing to remember is that by using adaptive tools you are helping to provide yourself with a quality of life and you are becoming a better advocate for yourself. Congratulations for taking these steps to better manage your scleroderma and to helping to improve your day to day activities.
